Abstract (en)

[origin: WO9936656A1] A roman blind has its guiding members (18) for the draw cords arranged with increasing space between the guiding members downwards. This makes the folds fall decoratively on each other when the blind is in its lifted position and the blind can be used as a window valance either single or with side curtains. The curtain has battens in channels (14, 15, 16, 17) sewn in the fabric and the guiding members (18) is attached to the blind at the battens.
