Abstract (en)

[origin: WO7900034A1] In a box with a folding cap, a sleeve (29), which is covered by the cap (17) when the latter is folded back, is formed directly from the one-piece cut-out blank used for making the box. The part of said blank corresponding to the sleeve is formed by cutting out an aperture in the blank, so that the sleeve remains bound to the front wall of the box by lateral strips (30, 31) only. When the sleeve is layed against the inner side of the front wall by Z-folding the lateral strips, the central part of said sleeves is in direct contact with the inner side of the said front wall.
