Abstract (en)
The security seal comprises a member with a barbed entry at one end and an exit at the other. A closure member is held captive and protruding from the exit of the first member. The closure has a barb at one end, allowing entry but not withdrawal from the barbed entry. The captive end of the closure can be enlarged to prevent it pulling through the exit. The closure can be slotted, to assist in the collapse of the member as the barbed end is forced through the entry. The closure can have a readily severable region.
