Abstract (en)

A sock is produced with uniform rib stitching throughout the whole length of the product, even at the pockets for the heel (T) and toe (E) where said rib stitching is formed with alternating motion and with increases and reductions in the courses for formation of said pockets. The appearance and elastic characteristics of the fabric, especially as regards the top (1) of the sock, are obtained by differentiated interlacing of the stitches of said rib stitching fabric, for instance by tucked stitches.
