Abstract (en)
[origin: WO8200614A1] A felt-tip pen (11), or similar utensile, has an elongated body (13) housing as is conventional, an ink-impregnated tow (15) which extends through an end of the body in the form of a writing point (17). A cover (35) for the point (17) is provided which protects the writing point (17) when the pen is not in use, and prevents the point from drying out. A conventional cover can be misplaced or lost while the implement is in use. To prevent lost, the cover is pivotally and slidably connected to the body to be movable between a first position in which it encloses and protects the point (17) and a second position in which the point (17) is uncovered for use and the cover (35) is snugly accommodated in a recess (29) in the body (13).
