Abstract (en)
A coin-operated entrainment machine, which may be of the fruit machine kind, has a number of display regions at which are produced, at the end of game, a combination of fixed visual displays (A,B,C), the aim being for a player to try to obtain a winning such combination. At the end of a game and before evaluation of the resulting display combination a control facility may become available which can operate automatically (if desired after operation of a control 15) to change the displayed combination with the aim of converting a losing combination to a winning combination.
