Abstract (en)
A method of making a loose-leaf stationery binder, which can be converted to a binder for binding stationery in a permanent fashion, the binder being made from a sheet which is folded so as to have a front cover (8) and a rear cover (11) at the spine of the binder, the sheet is folded at score lines (1-4) and a stiffened flexible strip (6) is inserted through holes in a face (10). The ends of the flexible strip (6) are bent over on a strip of card (7) and in this condition the binder can be used for loose-leaf stationery binding. One side of a double-sided adhesive strip (12) is stuck either to the cover (11) or to the strip (7) of card, a strip of protective paper covering the other side of the adhesive strip (12). When the binder is to be used for permanently binding stationery, the protective paper is removed and the strip (7) and the inner edge of the cover (11) are stuck together thereby to entrap the stiffened flexible strip (6) and to obscure it from view.
