Abstract (en)
In a gaming or amusement machine of the so-called fruit machine type, and employing not mechanical reels but an array of images on an optically or electronically generated display, e.g. a video screen 1, the images are all mutually independent on their random behaviour and consequently two or more mutually independent games can be played simultaneously by selecting any or each of two or more separate pay-lines. They should be selected by push-buttons 6 or by separate coin input slots, and there could be separate pay-out receptacles for the separate lines. There could also be vertical as well as, or instead of, horizontal pay-lines.
