Abstract (en)

A container for receiving newspapers entering a newspaper live storage buffer from a printing press. The container is formed by vertically extending corner members having interconnecting elements fixed in spaced relation along the longitudinal length thereof. The bottom of the container defines a gate member hinged to one side of the container and which is operatively associated with a latching lever. The latching lever is effective in holding the gate member in position for receiving and maintaining a load of newspapers within the container and of releasing the gate member to effect the unloading of the newspapers.
