Abstract (en)
In a casino game of two-up or the like in which a person, known as the spinner, spins two coins whilst standing in a ring (10), the total number of players is restricted and the players purchase their position in the ring by making a time-based payment, the house making no charge other than this payment. The game also includes a possibility that players bet against the house and the return to the players is based on betting that the spun coins will fall so that either two heads or two tails will be uppermost or, alternatively, not only on two heads and two tails being uppermost but also on mixed heads and tails; in either case the odds are adjusted so that over a period the house received a predetermined percentage of the total amount wagered. Above the ring (10) there is an obstruction such as a mesh (12) which, when struck by the coins, causes them to spin.
