Abstract (en)
A golf practising device (10) comprising a wholly integral spindle (14) pivotally mounted to a base structure (12) about a horizontal axis (22) so as to allow substantially free rotation thereabout and in such a way that on being hit by a golf club/wood it substantially simulates the feel of a conventional golf ball while at the same time remaining in the immediate vicinity of the base structure (12). The spindle (14) is pivotally mounted to the base structure (12) via either an axle (24) or a ball and socket joint (52, 54).
