Abstract (en)

When packing yielding objects (1-6) such as loaves of bread or the like in containers (7) such as trays, the intention is to fit as many objects (1-6) as possible into the container (7) even though the total outer dimensions of the objects somewhat exceed the packing dimensions of the container. According to the present invention this problem is solved by subjecting the objects to a downwardly directed force against at least two opposing edges of the objects and to an upwardly directed force at the centre of the lower sides of the objects, so that the object can be guided into the container and finally lowered into it when the upwardly directed force is removed. The invention also offers a means enabling said method of packing.
