The furniture has a resting surface for the shins and a resting surface for the buttocks, which resting surfaces are arranged in mutual mechanical connection so as to be rotatable on a floor standing frame. The furniture is to be ergonomically adaptable and provide the seated person with greater freedom of movement. For this purpose, the resting surface 12 for the shins and the resting surface 14 for the buttocks are to be arranged so as to be adjustable relative to each other insofar as their relative height and their relative spacing are concerned. <IMAGE>
