Abstract (en)

[origin: DE3634307A1] The sheet-like textile structure contains a basic knit (2) formed from warp threads (6) which are shaped to form stitch wales (4). The latter are connected by means of weft threads (10). A pattern thread (12) is laid in a weft-like manner and according to the particular pattern on one side of the basic knit (2). The pattern thread (12) is tied at least in portions to the basic knit (2) by means of at least one stitch wale consisting of an auxiliary warp thread (14). This construction forms a new and highly versatile possibility for the patterns of the sheet-like textile structure.
