Abstract (en)

The stackable carrier is folded from a single sheet of material (1) punched with creases (2) and cuts (3) in such a way as to form a base (4), surrounded by adjoining side walls (5, 6) of dissimilar height from which transversely hinged flaps (7, 8) extend at either end; the flaps are formed by making cuts along the wall hinge creases (2), and their height matched to the height of the lower side walls (5). At least two pairs of adjoining flaps (7, 8) are folded inwards parallel with one other so as to bridge each corner at an angle to the two relative walls (5, 6) and create an additional reinforced wall that comfortably supports the weight of the carriers (19) stacked above. Each stacked carrier is prevented from slipping by the higher side walls (6) of the carrier beneath.
