Abstract (en)
[origin: EP0491085A1] A dentist's chair is proposed in which the hitherto cumbersome adjustment of a set chair position when changing the position for treatment, especially when the patient or the person carrying out the treatment changes, can be dispensed with. To this end, means are provided which allow a "mouth point" previously adjusted to suit the patient and the person carrying out the treatment to be retained or, as the case may be, changed as a function of the height of the patient or of the person carrying out the treatment when there is, inter alia, a change in the inclined position of the backrest and/or head support. <IMAGE>
