Abstract (en)

Visiting cards carried by businessmen and businesswomen in the same company contain common character items such as company name and address and individual character items such as personal name and position or title. The common character items have been printed on printing cards in a large quantities by an offset press or any other printing device. Data regarding the individual character items for many employees are separately inputted with a keyboard and stored in the lump in a memory. Data are sequentially read out from the memory to be given to a printer of thermal transfer recording type for setting the individual character items on the printing cards on which the common character items have been printed. <IMAGE>
