Abstract (en)
[origin: EP0522246A1] What is proposed is a device for holding a clothes dryer (60) on a heating radiator (100), which has connecting tubes (52, 53, 55, 56, 57, 58, 59) arranged at a distance from one another in the vertical direction, there being provided between at least two connecting tubes a distance which is relatively larger than the other distances and which is designed as a recess (54). Two articulation points (80, 80') are provided at a distance from one another in the horizontal direction on the connecting tube (55) arranged underneath the recess (54) and are arranged at the front so that the clothes dryer (60), arranged with two supporting arms (70, 70') in correspondingly designed holding pieces (15, 15'), is pivotable out of an operating position and, in the pushed-together state, into a position of rest directed rearwards relative to the building wall, and at the same time is supported by bearing freely against the connecting tube (55). <IMAGE>
