Abstract (en)

An insole, particularly usable for items of footgear, includes a semirigid inner sole (3) to which a fabric or synthetic material is perimetrically stitched so as to define an internal pocket. A closeable opening for the insertion of a curing material (10) in the pocket is also defined below the inner sole. Once this operation has been performed, the opening is closed and the insole is inserted within the boot (2) and then the user inserts his foot inside the boot until the curing material has set. One thus obtains an insole which has an optimum configuration for the foot in the condition in which the item of footgear is used. <IMAGE>
