Abstract (en)

[origin: EP0564978A1] In order to be able to install large-volume bathtubs with the least possible space requirement, it has previously only been known to use so-called corner bathtubs which have a quarter-circle contour and could only be installed in a corner of the room. To use large-volume, comfortable bathtubs even in difficult space conditions, according to the invention a bath tub shape is proposed, in which, setting out from two parallel bathtub edge parts (4, 5), the respective end-side bathtub edge parts (6, 7) are arranged in such a way that the outer contour of the bathtub edge parts has an approximately trapezoidal course. This results in various installation possibilities, specifically both in the form of a corner installation and along a wall of a building. <IMAGE>
