Abstract (en)
[origin: WO9214378A1] Described is a curler for a hair-care appliance, the curler having a bearer element (80) fitted with means for mounting several strips (13). The strips (13) can be brought into various positions by means of adjusting means in order to vary the external diameter of the curler. Each strip (13) has a recess (39) extending along the whole of its length, and the sections of an adjacent strip physically interlock with the recess when the strips are in the appropriate position. An additional feature designed to increase the stability of the curler is the fact that the strips (13) are mounted on the bearer element (80) so that they can be moved longitudinally.
