Abstract (en)
[origin: EP0573886A1] In a shoe with a shaft which surrounds the forefoot of a wearer and is connected to a sole part, the shaft upper part and shaft lower part and a strip-shaped insert part, which extends in the connection region along the outline lines of the shaft parts, are interconnected by means of at least one hand-braided seam. In this case, the insert part can be received between the edges of the shaft parts or also overlap the edge of the shaft lower part on the outside of the shoe. A particular embodiment also envisages a two-ply insert part, in which two edge strips are sewn together along a cut edge. This insert part can be received altogether or also with only one edge strip between the shaft parts, in the latter case the second edge strip then overlapping the edge of the shaft lower part on the outside of the shoe. <IMAGE>
