Abstract (en)

The plaster slabs(1), to be employed in the formation of false ceilings,are provided in their edges with small grooves (2-3), which, in side engagement between slabs at the same level, define openenings with an intermediate step, which corresponds to the securing point of the slabs,engagement which is made by means of a threaded rod (4) secured to the frame (5) by a top rocker arm (6) and a nut-washer set (7-8); said threaded rod including also two other nut-washer sets; an intermediate one (9-10) forming a positioning stop and a lower one (11-12) which is the real fixing element, and which is fixed in the step of the openings defined between slabs, and which, after being definitively engaged, remains unseen by a plaster filling, which is at the same level as the bottom surface of the slabs (1). <IMAGE>
