Abstract (en)
[origin: US5413430A] A clamping device and clamping file for releasably holding sheets of paper or the like is disclosed. The clamping file includes two file covers connected to one another along a folding edge. The clamping device is swivellably fastened to one of the file covers at a window cut-out in the clamping file adjacent the folding edge. The clamping device includes first and second legs connected by a back to form a U-shaped elastic clamp for paper sheets. To facilitate insertion of paper sheets, a longitudinal end area of the clamping device is configured with one of the legs spaced from the other leg to form a paper inserting mouth which is maximally wide at a longitudinal end of one of the legs.
