Abstract (en)
[origin: EP0632183A2] The invention relates to a security counter having a substructure in which there are mounted one or more security panels which, for securing, can be rapidly moved out upwards by pneumatic cylinders or a rapid drive, by actuating a control device, and close the opening of the counter above the substructure. In the case of said security counter, it is provided that the one or more security panels can be extended via the one or more pneumatic drives provided or via one or more additional drives, in addition to another rapid drive, at a second speed which is substantially lower than the speed of extension of the security panels for securing, and that there is provided an actuating device for controlling the drive or drives for the second speed.
