Abstract (en)
Swimming bath pool having a retaining wall (3) which, in the active position, relative to the longitudinal direction thereof, extends between opposite side walls, in the direction at right angles thereto, at a distance from further opposite side walls and essentially from the bottom (2) upwards to above the water level in order to divide the pool into various sections lying next to each other, which retaining wall can optionally be brought into an active, separating position, and into an inactive position. According to the invention, the retaining wall is fastened to the bottom and can be swung between an essentially horizontal, inactive position, running parallel with the swimming bath bottom, and an active position in which the retaining wall runs upwards from the bottom. <IMAGE>
