Abstract (en)

[origin: EP0664404A2] The fitting is for articles of wood or similar material (1), being inserted and locked in a mating recess (2). Attached to the forward edge of the fitting body (10) are two oblique protruding arms (50) extending towards the recess sides (3). When these encounter the bottom (4) of the recess, they are deflected towards the body, so that their free ends (52) protrude beyond its sides and are pressed into the recess sides. In this position, locking portions (53,54) on the arms and body engage together, securing the body in position. The free arm ends can be chisel-shaped, each with a ramp face parallel to the body end in the first position.
