Abstract (en)
[origin: EP0704579A1] The shower-head is fixed in a holder (1) mounted on a bracket (2), which slides on a guide bar (5). A locking member (7) secures the bracket on the bar at the desired height. The holder hinges on the bracket, its hinging movement releasing the locking member from the bar. The member can be coupled to the holder via one or more links, typically a swing arm (11) acting at opposite ends against the member and a cam (14) coupled to the holder. There can be two opposite arms enclosing the cam at one end, while their other ends act together against the member. The cam engages in recesses in the arms with the member in the locked position.
