Abstract (en)

[origin: EP0707803A2] The insole is formed by cutting out a bottom section preferably matching the foot underside, a covering section, and an edge section. These are then assembled together in a press under vacuum and shaped on a plaster mould. The recess is formed in the covering portion at least along the side and heel edges. The side and heel portions can form a closed recess, and the former can extend into the vicinity of the first to the fifth metatarsal heads. The edge abs covering portions can be preheated and preferably free of glue, while the bottom one can be coated with glue before shaping. The assembled portions can be buffed to give their final shape.
