Abstract (en)
[origin: EP0718014A2] The hut or wall is largely non-transparent, and encloses an inner chamber. Three or more vertical bars (1) are woven in with the willow (3), and protrude from the underside of the latter. These can be thrust into the ground and can be formed by freshly-cut branches, typically also of willow. An entrance or window (4,5) can be formed in the woven structure. The latter can protrude above the bars, where it is woven together to form a dome (6). The bars can be inserted with their thicker ends downwards, and they can be at the corners of a regular polygon.
