Abstract (en)

[origin: EP0721041A1] The cross-section is formed by a flat middle portion (1b) and two side flanges (1a) parallel to it and joined to it via inclined ribs (1c). On both sides, the width (b) of the middle portion is the same, as is the width (a) between the ribs, so that the embossed and recessed surfaces are complementary to each other. The fitting can be formed by a thin metal strip wound into a coil, so that adjacent turns fit one inside the other. The strip can be unwound from the coil and parted off into lengths for forming into finished articles.
