Abstract (en)
[origin: EP0724120A1] The console has a fastening rail (1) with lower and upper contact elements (5,7) to hold the radiator or parts of it. The movable second element is connected to a traction element (19), to move it out of mounting position against the force of a spring (10). The traction element has at least one additional locking element (20). This acts with a locking element on the fastening rail, so that the movement of the traction element against the spring is impeded, and can only be executed freely after pivoting the traction element away from the fastening rail resp. the wall. Both locking elements are formed as tooth/teeth.
