Abstract (en)
[origin: EP0727311A1] The printing machine has two additional stops (10) which protrude further in the direction of the plate cylinder (1) than the stops (11) associated with the ring (2) on the end sides of the cylinder. When the cylinder is in the appropriate position the additional stops act on same. The stops are formed as screws turned in the threaded bores of the strip which extends parallel to the cylinder axis and is adjustable relative to it. The stops can act on the area of the surface of the cylinder next to the ring, apart from the largest printing plate format.
