Abstract (en)
[origin: EP0727540A1] The tile has a head fold with at least outer and inner ribs and a separating groove, and side, covering and foot folds. The underside has longitudinal ribs which start near the head, and extend to the foot. The underside also has a collecting rib (226), especially near the head, which extends across roughly the whole width of the tile. It forms a rainwater guide with other underside ribs (521,621,623,225), which themselves form guides with the foot fold. The collecting rib may be flush with the edge (212) of the head of the tile, and may form the lower part of its end wall.
