Abstract (en)
The present invention pertains to a shower with a built-in pin device (45, 46) that can be positively moved from a non-operating position with the pins away from said ring of holes (35). The pin device (45, 46) is constantly kept in the non-operating position by a recovery spring (48), and is moved into the operating position after breaking off the delivery of any one jet of water, by means of a final additional rotation in one direction or the other of an element used to divert the water towards any one ring of holes of the shower. <IMAGE>
