Abstract (en)

The truncated pyramid container consists of an external rigid container (4), a flexible bag (1) which contains liquid products (3), bag valves (2) and a cover (5). Several identical rigid containers can be threaded one in the other when the container does not contain any liquid. It is thus possible to concentrically pile hollow bodies of equivalent volume. It is possible to replace the internal bag after each use, avoiding cleaning of the external rigid container. It is also possible to have the same functions with different base shapes having the shape of regular or irregular polygons.
