Abstract (en)
[origin: EP0761263A2] The lottery card is produced from a relatively stiff material such as cardboard. Printed on the card are one or more game fields (2) consisting of a matrix of numbered cells (5). Each cell has a circular perforated section (4) that can be removed by the player using the tip of a pen. Typically the player is required to select a limited number of numbers. The remaining section of the card is available for advertising matter.
