Abstract (en)
The mattress has through-passage apertures (7) in a peripheral direction which have a distance of approximately 5 cm to the adjacent aperture at the same level. Four apertures are arranged vertically one above the other, so that four superimposed, parallel running planes of hole rows are formed. The through passage structures (7) are circular round and each of them is secured by an eyelet. The side and face walls (3-6) of the mattress are formed by an all-round strip of pre-stitched strong textile fabric.
