Abstract (en)
[origin: EP0780077A1] The retaining rib (2) is connected firmly to the main holder (1) in the edge areas, so that in the central area of the holder between the main holder and the retaining rib an elongate through-aperture (5) is formed for the insertion of the hooks (10). The retaining rib has a wall thickness corresp. to that of the main holder and is angled to the plain of the main holder. The angle between the planes of the retaining rib and the main holder is pref. between 30 and 50 deg. At least one area of the main holder or the retaining rib abutting on the through-passage aperture has a reinforcement beading (7). A reinforcement wall (6) runs from the side edges of the retaining rib to those of the main holder.
