Abstract (en)
[origin: WO9613989A1] Disclosed are panty briefs, primarily intended for the fixation of a diaper. Interknitted in the waist portion (5) of the briefs are elastic threads (11, 11') generally extending in the circumferential direction of the waist portion. These elastic threads produce an elastic contraction in the circumferential direction of the briefs in order to establish a tight fit depending on the size of the wearer. In order to obtain the best possible fit for large and small wearers, the elastic threads (11) only form meshes with the base web of the briefs along a portion of the extension of these threads (11) in the circumferential direction of the briefs. This causes the waist portion of the briefs to appear with undulations allowing improved adaptation to large and small wearers without the risk of irritating local pressures.
