Abstract (en)

[origin: WO9621287A1] A receiver (46) identifies and describes the source and content of programs transmitted from different radio stations (24). The radio stations transmit program codes (38) that are processed independently from an associated broadcast program. The audio portion of the radio transmission can then be turned on and off according to the type of information contained in the associated program code. The program codes also contain graphic data describing the associated program and the radio station.
