Abstract (en)

[origin: EP0803613A1] The build-up plate (1) on the under side has a narrow longitudinal rib, which projects in relation to a blunt termination surface. At least one of the shells (2,3) has a narrow edge in relation to its thickness. The narrow edge or the longitudinal rib is formed as a cutting edge. The edge, the longitudinal rib or the cutting edge (6) is aligned with an outer surface of the build-up plate turned away from the building ditch (12). The two shells are held against each other preferably by reinforcements and form a concealed shuttering for the wall (18) to be produced. The shell facing the building ditch may be shortened on all sides in relation to the counter shell.
