Abstract (en)
[origin: WO9622819A1] The invention concerns a playing card (10). In order to play various card games, known playing cards have to be held in the player's hand. As a result, players frequently have to concentrate more on handling the cards than on the game itself. Furthermore, conventional cards have the disadvantage of rapidly becoming worn or sticking together as a result of being used. The object of the invention is to provide playing cards (10) with which a plurality of different card games can be played and the cards can be handled more easily. A playing card (10) is provided with a sheet bearing a face (14) displaying the card value (clubs, spades, hearts or diamonds) and a neutral reverse side (16). The sheet consists of a rigid plate (12) approximately 2 mm thick.
