Abstract (en)

[origin: EP0815823A1] The deflector distributes the compressed-air by means of a rotary plate (2). Two or more sockets (3a,3c) are formed in its underside, and into which the compressed air can flow if desired via the pressure chamber (1e) inside the deflector. These fit onto mating bosses (4,5) formed in the mat (6). In the top of the deflector there can be a further mounting (1a) for the hose union from a fan connected to the pressure chamber. A stop (1d) inside the mounting limits the depth for which the hose can be inserted.
