Abstract (en)
[origin: EP0843062A2] The fixture has a part in a rabbet groove (31). On this part is a holder (1) which works with the groove's two opposing walls. The holder preferably has, on its two sides facing the groove walls (32), at least one extension (8a,8b). This extension is sprung away from the facing groove wall. There may be several extensions along the holder which end in the depth of the rabbet groove at different heights. At least one extension can be a clamp which extends less than each of the sprung extensions on its side of the holder. Several such clamps can brought together to form a clamp surface.
