Abstract (en)
[origin: EP0844345A1] The inward pointing protuberances (5) on the cover and or plate (2) are for attaching component parts of the mortise lock. At least some of the protuberances from the material of the cover and or plate are vertically inward drawn cylindrical bushings extending at most as far as the opposite side part (2). Two facing cylindrical bushings fit together to form a screw-duct (13). The cylindrical bushing resting against the screw head has an internal diameter larger than the nominal thread diameter of the mortise lock screw (14) in the form of a tallow-drop or countersunk head screw.
