Abstract (en)
The fitted-out shower booth has a support frame (1) for side walls (2) extending upwards from a base basin (3), and further comprises a plurality of water delivery spouts and nozzles that are capable of being selectively operated through valves controlled by a central electronic control unit (8), as well as steam generation means (6, 7). The central electronic control unit (8) and the steam generation means (6) are mounted on a substantially vertical support plate (18) that is arranged behind one of said side walls (2) of the booth and is linked up to said frame (1) by means of guiding means (19) that enable said plate to slide transversally into a position in which it is pulled out with respect to the booth, thereby ensuring easy and full accessibility of the operational component parts (6-17) that are mounted thereon. <IMAGE>
