Abstract (en)
A method for separately collecting waste, wherein the waste is collected in containers at a place where the waste is produced and subsequently carried off to a place where the final processing of the waste will take place, characterized in that the waste is collected in separate containers (1,2,3), which are substantially box-shaped, whereby the waste, once it has been collected in a particular container, is carried off in the same container and remains present therein until final processing takes place. <IMAGE>
