Abstract (en)
The invention relates to a plastic bucket with a bottom and a standing peripheral wall connected thereto, on which peripheral wall an outward extending peripheral flange is present which connects to the peripheral wall at a distance from the mouth rim, which peripheral flange comprises a first flange part extending at least more or less transversely of the peripheral wall and, connecting to the first flange part, a downward extending second flange part with a first free end edge, on which second flange part are formed two handgrips placed mutually diagonally. Each handgrip is embodied as a cowl-like, outward protruding part of the second flange part, comprising a first handgrip part extending outward relative to the second flange part, a downward extending second handgrip part connecting to the first handgrip part and two support shores which are each connected to the second flange part and the peripheral ends of the first handgrip part and the second handgrip part, wherein the lower edge of the second handgrip part lies substantially in the plane of the lower free end edge. <IMAGE>
