Abstract (en)
[origin: EP0931483A1] The reclinable armrests (3) form separate parts of the sofa (1) from the support frame on which the seat (2) and backrest (6) sections are mounted. The armrests can be rotated through at least 180 degrees about a central axis (D) between a position in which they are actually used as armrests and a reclined position for extending the bed surface area. Rotation of the armrests is achieved using a movable bracket (10) that can be locked into position. When the sofa is viewed from above, the rotation axis for the armrest bisects the seat (2) at least in half. The rotation axis also follows a less angled path than the plane of the non-reclined armrest position, when the sofa is viewed from the front.
